

Jewell began showing her love for instruments at the young age of 6 when she began piano and then took violin lessons. As she got older she played more with the other string instruments and in high school switched to viola. She went on to play under the instruction of Amy Leventhal of the Atlanta Symphony and Peter Lemmonds in high school at Paideia. She studied viola and received a BA at Converse College with John MacLean and played with the Spartanburg Symphony and Chamber orchestra. She has been in the Atlanta area since and has played with the Georgia Philharmonic and Perimeter Church with Laura Story. She has spread her love for music by helping her students with all the string instruments, piano, vocals and guitar and some woodwinds. She has loved being in after school clubs in local public schools teaching keys as well. Her love for teaching and seeing her students come from their performance with excitement and success is what brings her to Musical Elements this fall.